The Wars of 9/11

This course examines the terrorist attacks on the U.S. homeland on September 11, 2001, the subsequent U.S. invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq, the Arab Spring and Syrian Civil War, the Refugee Crisis in Europe, and the rise of ISIS.

History of War

This course examines the evolution of warfare and its impact on human civilization from antiquity to the present.

Introduction to the Historical Discipline

This course introduces history as an academic discipline by investigating the methods and analytical approaches historians use to understand the past.

World War II

This graduate readings seminar focuses on topics such as military innovation in the interwar period, the combat effectiveness of the various nations, the Battle of the Atlantic, the air war, the Russo-German war, the Holocaust, alliance politics, war economies, intelligence and deception, racism and ideology, and the atomic bomb.

Military Thought and Strategy

This graduate readings seminar focuses on major theorists of strategy and on the major themes in its formulation and implementation over the ages.

The Making of Strategy

This graduate readings seminar analyzes the making of strategy through a number of case studies from ancient times to the present.

U.S. Military History, 1903 to the Present

This course examines the history of American military policy in the 20th and 21st centuries and the growth of the United States from insular nation to global superpower. The course focuses on the interrelationship of foreign and military policy, the conduct of war, the genesis of national security policy and civilian control of the decision-making process, and the influence of American society upon the armed forces as social institutions.

World War II

This course examines the causes, course, and consequences of World War II. Topics of study include the national and theater strategies of the various major combatants, the military operations that led to victory or defeat on battlefields spanning the globe, and other factors such as leadership, economics, military doctrine and effectiveness, technology, ideology, and racism that impacted the outcome of the war.

Counterinsurgency Warfare, 1899 to the Present

This graduate readings seminar studies the history of counterinsurgency warfare from 1899 to the present through selected case studies from the Boer War to the Iraq War.

Assistant Professor, Department of History
United States Military Academy, West Point, New York

West Point and the American Military Experience

This graduate seminar examines the role of West Point in American history, including its role in the Revolutionary War and its founding as a school for engineers and artillery in 1802, its role in the exploration of the American West, the participation of its graduates in the wars of the 19th and 20th centuries, and the Academy's interaction with American culture and society.

Weapons and Warfare in the 20th Century

This course examines the process of technological and doctrinal change in warfare during the 20th century. The course focuses on the role of political, economic, social, ideological, organizational, and institutional factors in shaping the adoption of military technology.

History of the Military Art

This course traces the evolution of war from the Hundred Years War to the wars of the 20th century. The course examines the changing nature of warfare as nations adjust to social, political, economic, cultural, and technological developments.
